'TWAS NOT WILFUL ERROR

Messrs. Cope, Hamersley and Huntly, of Vancouver, Purged of Contempt.

Affidavits Galore Enlighten the Court and Show They Erred Thro' Ignorance.

The Injunction Issued by the Court Restraining Vancouver Must be Obeyed.

The case of the C.P.N. Co. vs. the city of Vancouver, came up this morning in the Supreme Court before Mr. Justice Crease on the contempt of court charge. The court room was crowded to suffocation, and "standing room only" was literally the case. The three defendants were the centre of the multitude's gaze, but they stood it with dignified composure. Deputy Sheriff T. Armstrong kept guard upon them. Around the counsel's table were gathered many of the most brilliant stars of the provincial bar, busy with their briefs. The three gentlemen accused answered to their names. The return was then read. Messrs. McPhillips and Pooley appeared for the defendants; Messrs. Bodwell and Helmcken for the C.P.N. Co. Mr. Bodwell stated that copies of all the affidavits in the case had been served upon the counsel for the defence some days before. This, after some argument, was admitted by them. Mr. McPhillips explained that through the inaccuracy of the mails Mr. Hamersley had not received the copies mailed him by Mr. McPhillips. Mr. Bodwell said he had no desire to take the other side by surprise, but there had been no undue haste in the matter. He would not oppose an adjournment to enable his learned friend, Mr. Hamersley, to collect further evidence. Asked for his authority for certain statements re committing for contempt, he stated there was nothing to prevent him entering any proceedings against them for contempt. He was quite willing they should have ample time to collect their evidence.

Hon. Mr. Pooley said that the service had been made by telegraph. No notice of affidavits was sent defendants. The writ was obtained from his lordship before the proper facts were placed before him. The personal attendance of the defendants in this case was not necessary, as they were represented by counsel.

Mr. Bodwell contended that the arguments of his learned friend were entirely irregular.

Mr. Pooley said no time had been allowed the defendants to collect their evidence.

His Lordship said that the personal attendance of the defendants had placed them in a very good position.

Mr. Bodwell said the proceeding was altogether and unnecessarily irregular. Mr. Pooley was in the court when the writ of attachment issued, and if he had thought there was anything wrong about it he could have moved to set aside the writ. But six days had elapsed and he had not done the first thing towards making such a motion. He (Mr. Bodwell) had no right to accept any short notice of application for adjournment.

His Lordship said that now the defendants were here as short a time as practicable should be taken to hear all they had to say and what the other side had to say.

Mr. Bodwell said these gentlemen could not afford to rest one moment under the imputation which was now brought against them. The counsel for these gentlemen ought not to be heard until the defendants had put themselves in a position to be heard.

Mr. Pooley stated that Mr. Bodwell knew perfectly well that he could not make a motion to set aside the writ of attachment as he had not material to work upon.

Mr. Bodwell denied this and said Mr. Pooley knew all this when the writ issued.

His Lordship had no objection to adjourn the court to allow defendants to collect evidence.

The affidavits were then read, those of the defendants first.

Mr. Pooley said defendants had no desire to act in any way against the order of this court. They had acted upon the best legal advice they considered they were able to obtain in the province, and had no intention of disobeying the orders of the court. The affidavit of A. St. G. Hamersley stated in effect that they had acted upon the best legal advice. They allowed passengers to land as ordered by the court, but detained them afterwards. He denied the statements alleged to have been made by him to Captain Rudlin on the wharf at Vancouver. Captain Rudlin promised to take his passengers back to Victoria, but landed them at Port Moody. He would never counsel any disobedience of any ordinance of the court.

The affidavit of Joseph Huntly, health officer of Vancouver, was next read; it stated that owing to the vigorous measures taken by him the disease had been prevented from spreading in Vancouver, also detailing the already known operations in that city. The affidavit gave full details of the five cases of smallpox alleged to have come from Victoria on the steamer Yosemite. He had as far as he knew obeyed the instructions issued to him. He knew nothing of the injunction issued on the 16th inst. He has never disobeyed the orders of the court and has always been and is now anxious and willing to carry them out. Another affidavit of Mr. Huntly was read respecting the case of a Japanese said to have come from Vancouver. The affidavit of Mr. Cope, mayor of Vancouver, which was sent down before he came himself, showed that he did not know that any passengers or freight had been prevented from landing at Vancouver. He would do all in his power to carry out the orders of the court. The affidavit of Wilson Herald, M. D., health officer of Vancouver, was next read. He detailed his actions in relation to the smallpox quarantine regulation. He has attended the arrival of the steamer Yosemite at Vancouver since the 13th inst. Since he has been health officer five cases, all of which he believes came from Victoria, have come under his care. He has taken every precaution against the spread of the disease, and has done his best to carry out the regulations. Nothing has ever been said to him by the provincial health officers that he should pursue a different course. Mr. Pooley said Dr. Herald seemed to be carrying out the regulations of the provincial authorities without relation to the municipal authorities. City Clerk McGuigan's affidavit certified that Dr. Herald had been instructed by the city to carry out the regulations.

Mr. Connon's affidavit stated that the landing of Victoria freight at Vancouver had not been delayed any longer than necessary to disinfect the same.

Dr. McGuigan's affidavit testified that he was present when the injunction was served on Mr. Hamersley, and that the orders of the court had been strictly carried out by him. Dr. McGuigan is president of the Vancouver board of health. It was considered absolutely necessary that the regulations and by-laws in force at Vancouver should be strictly enforced, and but for this action the spread of the disease could not have been checked. A number of affidavits from Vancouver medical men were put in after one being read as a sample. They were to the effect that there was great danger of the disease spreading, that vaccination was no protection against the bringing of the disease from Victoria to Vancouver, and that the precautions taken were necessary. The medical affidavits were from Drs. Brydone-Jack, Ferguson, Mills, Kelly, Wilson, Thomas, Langis, W. J. McGuigan.

Mr. Pooley said a telegram was the only order defendants got from the court, the orders with the affidavits were mailed later, but had never been received. Defendants had shown no intention of disobeying the order of the court. The city council of Vancouver had no power or control over Dr. Herald, who was carrying out the health regulations. No obstruction had been placed in the way of passengers landing at Vancouver. There was no contempt of this court. When his learned friend put such twaddle in an affidavit as he had against Mr. Hamersley it should be treated with the contempt it deserves.

The affidavit of Dr. Morrison, stating that the city was "infested with an infectious and pestilential disease," was also put in.

Mr. Bodwell said the case should be treated with all the dignity this court could command and be given a calm and dispassionate consideration. It had not been denied that the passengers were detained in quarantine after landing, or claimed that the detention was for the purpose of examination, therefore, it was perfectly clear that a breach of his lordship's order had taken place. The medical affidavits could be swept aside as they did not go to show in what manner the regulations had been carried out. It was perfectly clear that the terms of the order had been made known to these gentlemen, the defendants. They did not pretend to disobey the order, but for some reason they had not obeyed it. They stated that they were acting on the best legal advice; they could not set up their opinion against the order of this court. A considerable time elapsed from the issuance of the order and the motion for contempt proceedings, and all that time they had not obeyed the order of the court. The most charitable view was that the disobedience had taken place through an error of judgment rather than through any wilful determination to disobey the order. He asked that the court place upon their action the most charitable construction. He asked that it should stand that they had disobeyed the order through an error of judgment and not wilfully. They had shown that they were willing to obey the order of the court, indeed they thought they were obeying it. Everything that could be said in their favor has been said, yet the case remains as it was that contempt had been committed. They say that they misunderstood the telegram, and he was not prepared to say that they should not be believed. He read the telegram and said he could not see how language so plain could be misunderstood. He could not, and he felt sure His Lordship could not, see how they could misunderstand it. The error of judgment into which they had fallen was very strange. The only order he could ask His Lordship to make would be that the action for contempt be discharged and the defendants made to pay costs.

His Lordship said he had thought carefully over the matter in all its phases. He hoped he had come to the conclusion he had wisely and justly. He had no doubt at all as to the validity of the order restraining the authorities of Vancouver. They had infringed upon Dominion authority; they had practically shut the door of access to the rest of the Dominion from the whole of Vancouver Island. The only other way in was by 'Frisco. The gentlemen who had been acting for Vancouver had been acting conscientiously but quite erroneously. They had been ill-advised, but had committed a very grave error. There was not a man who should afterwards read the evidence but would admit that the judgment which had been issued was right and just. There is nothing to prevent persons coming to that port being personally inspected, but the act of the officials at Vancouver had practically stopped all traffic in that direction. It was not in fulfilment of the health by-law of Vancouver. He had thoroughly examined their by-law and found it contained all the best points necessary for such a by-law. But the city had no power to say that all persons must go into quarantine wholesale. The injunction itself is based upon a decision that will stand the test of the court of appeal. The defendants had shown what was greatly to their credit and honor. They had come here at great personal inconvenience to themselves and set at rest all question of contempt. His Lordship then purged defendants of the charge of contempt, the defendants to pay all costs and the injunction to be obeyed.

A Russian Exile's Story.

CHICAGO, July 26.—Max Limon, until lately a rich banker of Kiev, Russia, recently exiled by the Czar's edict against Hebrews, is working in the stock room of John Bros.' clothing house for a weekly salary of $7. At one time Limon's fortune amounted to 700,000 roubles, almost half a million dollars, but for five weeks he wandered about the streets of Chicago in search of work, and had it not been for a pittance occasionally bestowed by the charitably inclined he would have starved to death. Three months ago he received notice to leave the land of the Czar. Six weeks ago he arrived in Chicago. Behind him he left his worldly possessions, practically confiscated. "I lived all my life in Kiev," said he yesterday, "and was engaged in the money brokerage business. Three months ago I received notice from the Russian police to leave inside of a month. At the expiration of the time, being unable to wind up my affairs, I asked for an extension and was given two weeks more. A great part of my fortune I lost because I could not close up my instruments in the short time. Thirty thousand roubles for which I still hold notes are due me, but I do not know how to collect the money. I cannot speak English, and am a total stranger here. I cannot send the notes to Russia, as I am afraid I would never see a single kopeck in return. My three children are still in Kiev."

Cubans Organizing.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., July 25.—Nearly one thousand Cubans resident in this city have joined a Cuban organization for the purpose of assisting their countrymen in the event of a war with Spain. A meeting here yesterday was attended by fully 15,000 Cubans, besides many Spaniards. The speakers were Jose Marti, the exiled Cuban patriot, who is now living in New York, Gen. Carlos Roloff, Lt.-Col. S. Sanchez and J. D. Perin. Senor Marti explained the object of the meeting, and told in a forcible way the exact situation in Cuba. His visit was not for the purpose of arousing feeling against Spain, but to organize the Cubans into clubs that would assist in the cause of independence with their money when an opportunity presented. The other speakers added but little to what he said, but all insisted on having an organization and being on the alert for emergencies.

The Manitoba Elections.

WINNIPEG, July 26.—Later returns make some changes in the results of the provincial election. Hagel, who aspired to be Opposition leader after Roblin, is defeated in Kildonan by J. J. Bird. Shaffner, Opposition, who was reported elected in Turtle Mountain, by John Hettle. In St. Andrews F. W. Colcleugh, Government, was elected by 78 majority over Baldwinson, Opposition. This leaves only one seat to be heard from, Dauphin, which is supposed to have returned the Opposition candidate, Glen. Campbell. This will leave the figures: Government, 25; Opposition, 14; Independent, 1; a clear majority of 10 over all for the Government. Some of the majorities are very small, so that recounts and protests may yet make some changes in the composition of the House.

A Supposed Accomplice.

LONG BRANCH, July 26.—The police received word yesterday from Supt. O'Meara, of the Pittsburg police, to watch for Mollick, charged with being an accessory to the attempted assassination of H. C. Frick. Mollick was employed as a journeyman baker by U. J. Heidel, a confectioner of this place. When the police went to arrest him they found he had quietly left some time in the afternoon. Mollick came to Long Branch from New York about three weeks ago. On Wednesday or Thursday of last week he sent a money package to A. Berkman, Allegheny City. It is thought the report that the police had connected others than Berkman with the attempt on Frick's life frightened Mollick.

A Horrible Tragedy.

LONDON, July 26.—A terrible tragedy is reported from the village of Guzen, in Bally Janion, county of Rosscommon, Ireland. A woman in the village, having become insane, seized her three children, one after another, and held them head downward in a pot of boiling water until they were dead. She then attempted to commit suicide in the same manner, but was discovered before life was extinct, though not until she was so severely scalded that recovery is impossible.

An English Railway Accident.

LONDON, July 25.—A serious accident happened to-day to the Nottingham express train. When near Melton Mowbray station, about 14 miles from Leicester, the train suddenly left the rails and rolled down the embankment, which is quite high at that place, falling a mass of wrecked and broken cars and engine into a brickyard. The engineer, stoker and fireman, who was with the engine, were instantly killed, and many passengers injured. The wreck fortunately did not take fire.

San Diego's Celebration.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Representative Bowers interviewed President Harrison and Secretary Tracy on the subject of ordering warships to San Diego next September, when the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of San Diego bay will be celebrated. Mr. Bowers was encouraged by the President and the Secretary said to him, "You will have ships at San Diego during the celebration, if they are to be found in the Pacific ocean."

Another Shake.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 26.—A light earthquake shock was felt in the city at 2 o'clock this morning.

ARRIVED AT VANCOUVER.

The Remains of the Late Premier Robson Brought in on the Train To-day.

Vancouver People Still Talking Foolishly on the Quarantine Question.

Prof. Saunders' Visit—Westminster Council Decides to Raise the Quarantine.

VANCOUVER, July 26.—The remains of the late Hon. John Robson arrived to-day, accompanied by his relatives. The train was about 20 minutes late. At the depot a large number of persons congregated awaiting the arrival, among whom were G. E. Corbould, M. P., Mayor Townsend, Messrs. C. J. Major, T. J. Trapp, D. Robson, Corrigan, Land Registrar, Hugh Cunningham, Warwick and others from Westminster; Reeve Sexsmith, a number of clergymen, members of the Vancouver Board of Trade, who attended in a body, and many other prominent citizens, both ladies and gentlemen. A number of beautiful floral wreaths were sent to the depot to honor the remains. At 1:30 the boat had not arrived from Westminster but when it does the procession will move from the train and the remains will be placed on board. The remains are enclosed in a metallic coffin, and were brought on a special car ahead of the mail and baggage. The proceedings here were of the most reverent character, and although the crowd was very large an air of deep sorrow and funereal quiet was apparent. It is not known yet what time the boat will leave for Victoria.

FROM THE CAPITAL.

Canadian Credit in London—Intercolonia Railway Inspection.

OTTAWA, July 26.—J. M. Courtney, Deputy Minister of Finance, who returned from London, where he was floating the Dominion loan, to-day, says that the credit of Canada never stood so high in England as to-day. This was not only the case in regard to the Canadian Government issue, but also in regard to the Canadian Pacific.

Messrs. Haggart and Schreiber, accompanied by Dr. Montague, left to-day to examine the Intercolonial Railway.

STILL OBSTINATE.

Vancouver Proposes to Quarantine Westminster—Prof. Saunders.

VANCOUVER, July 26.—The Vancouver council last night decided not to raise the quarantine against Victoria on the invitation of New Westminster. Acting-Mayor Anderson yesterday communicated with the Sound ports and ascertained by wire that they had no intention of lifting the quarantine just yet. Vancouver will now probably quarantine Westminster as well.

Prof. Saunders, Canada's World's Fair Commissioner, arrived to-day to advise with the commissioners here and with the Government. He will not go to Victoria, not because he's afraid of smallpox, but he objects to being quarantined 14 days on his return. It is understood the Minister of Agriculture will not go out of Victoria to meet him.

THE QUARANTINE RAISED.

The Other Cities Asked to Co-operate With New Westminster.

NEW WESTMINSTER, July 26.—Chas. Stuart, aged 70, an old miner, was found dead in his shack near Hope, Monday morning. Death was caused by paralysis.

Westminster has raised the quarantine against Victoria. A resolution was passed at last night's session of the City Council to that effect by a vote of six to three. Mayor Townsend telegraphed the other cities asking co-operation in raising the quarantine. A reply came from Nanaimo that that place had never quarantined Victoria. The Sound cities did not reply.

Mayor Townsend will officially represent New Westminster at the funeral of Hon. John Robson. Rev. E. Robson, C. G. Major, D. Robson, T. D. Pearson, T. J. Trapp, C. J. Robson, F. H. Robson, Chas. Warwick, J. S. Clute and Jno. Corrigan, of New Westminster, will also be present.

Mr. Fay is Not Dead.

STAMFORD, Conn., July 26.—The friends of Hugh J. Fay, the comedian, are rejoicing at the news that the story of his reported death 10 days ago has no foundation. Cablegrams from both him and his bride to friends in this city state that he is very much alive in Liverpool. He was married June 29 last, to Miss Grace Decker, of Stamford. Three days later the couple sailed for Europe on the steamship Wisconsin. Ten days ago it was reported that the comedian had suffered a hemorrhage during the voyage and died before reaching Liverpool.

Another Suspect.

PITTSBURG, July 26.—H. Bauer, another supposed accomplice of Berkman, has been arrested in Allegheny.

THE CANAL TOLL WAR.

Passage of the Retaliation Measure—Views of Canadian Journals.

TORONTO, July 25.—Commenting on the proposed retaliation measures of the United States Government against Canada in the matter of canals, the Toronto News, Liberal-Conservative, in an editorial headed "Give Blow for Blow," says it should be the Dominion's policy to cultivate the most friendly relations with the United States, but it is good to understand that this is not to be brought about by lying down and allowing the Americans to walk over us. It is the duty of our Government to return blow for blow. Americans employed in this country should be dealt with as Canadian laborers are dealt with across the line. If the Americans want to fight, and nothing else will do, give them enough of it. The Montreal Star prints an editorial couched in similar language.

MONTREAL, July 25.—The passage of the Retaliation bill by congress has called forth considerable press comment. The Herald and Witness are advising a policy of conciliation towards the U. S. The latter, after expressing a doubt of the sincerity of the Canadian government in its pretended effort to secure improved commercial relations, advises the abandonment of a policy plainly opposed to the attainment of that end and describes the situation to be one from which a rude awakening may occur at any moment.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 25.—Upon the same subject which Canadian newspapers discuss under the heading "Give Blow for Blow"—the retaliation bill passed by this congress last week—the Washington City Post in a leading editorial says: "The Canadian retaliation bill has now passed both houses of congress and will speedily become a law. While a retaliatory policy is in some respects objectionable and as a rule to be avoided if possible, especially between such near neighbors as Canada and the United States, for the reason that innocent citizens are the victims of its oppressive results, there is no other way in this instance in which to bring the Dominion Government to itself, and that such will be its effect is highly desirable to the interests of all parties concerned. This discrimination against American commerce passing through Welland, St. Lawrence and other canals is so obviously inequitable that it is passing strange the Canadian authorities should not readily grant the relief desired. They will doubtless realize in time, should their stubborn position be maintained, that two can play at the same game and that Canadian commerce is subject to burdens in American waters so long as the vessels of the United States in Canadian waters are subjected to similar impositions."

The crops in Nova Scotia, particularly eastern and Cape Breton counties, are suffering severely from drought. The eastern part of Quebec province is reported to be suffering considerably from drought. Hardly any rain has fallen, and as a consequence the crops will be poor.

Collections for the sufferers by the recent fire in St. John's were taken up in all the Roman Catholic churches in Toronto Sunday. The responses were liberal, and the total amount realized was considerable. The Board of Trade relief fund on Saturday had a little over $10,000 to its credit.

The captain of the steamer Havana, which has just returned to Halifax from taking a cargo of relief supplies to St. John's, Nfld., says he could not get men to unload the cargo without paying them. He threatened to bring the cargo back, when the local relief committee secured men to unload the supplies.

Le Patrie has commenced a series of important articles to show the short comings of the French Canadian public school system, and its failure to meet popular requirements, and the manner in which the children of the poor are deprived of education. The paper demands, in the interest of society, the abolition of monthly fees and the gratuitous distribution of school books and requisites. It demands that instruction be given to all, and that the government shall enforce the principle of compulsory attendance.

It is understood that negotiations are now going on, with every prospect of successful consummation, for the purchase of the Springhill, Nova Scotia, coal mines by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As these mines are situated on the Intercolonial, it is assumed that this road will soon be absorbed by the Canadian Pacific Railway system. The principal reason advanced for the purchase of the mines is that the Canadian Pacific requires almost the entire output for its own use, and that the Springhill coal is the best adapted for railway use.

Vanderbilt's Yacht Sunk.

BOSTON, July 24.—The steamer H. F. Dimock, of the Metropolitan Steamship Company, arrived this evening, having on board the occupants of W. K. Vanderbilt's yacht Alva, which the steamer ran down this morning. The Alva, under the command of Captain Morrison, left the harbor at 4 o'clock on Saturday evening bound for Newport, R.I., having on board the owner and his guests, Frank W. Vanderbilt, George DeForrest, Louis Webb, Winfield Scott White and Frank Riggs, all of whom are summering at Newport. Early this morning a thick fog set in and Captain Morrison decided it imprudent to run further, as the yacht was in the track of coasting vessels. After 6 o'clock, on making the lightship the anchor was dropped and whistles and horns blown at frequent intervals. Shortly after 3 a.m. the guests were aroused by a heavy crash, accompanied by a tearing of the plates of the vessel. William Vanderbilt was the first on deck. Looming through the fog they could see the dark hull of a huge steamer backing away from the yacht. The yacht hailed the steamer and informed the captain that the yacht must sink. A steam launch, four row boats and a naptha launch were lowered from the Alva, which was rapidly sinking, and the owner and passengers, with the crew of fifty-two men were soon rapidly pulling away from the doomed craft. But none too soon, for when they were about a cable's length from the vessel, she plunged down bow first, and nothing but the tops of her three masts remained out of water. The Dimock was going at a greatly reduced speed at the time of the collision, otherwise she would probably have run right over the Alva and a frightful loss of life would have been the result, owing to the fact that eleven passengers and half of the crew were asleep at the time of the accident. None of the passengers or crew saved a thing but their clothing. The Alva was one of the finest pleasure steamers afloat and cost nearly $500,000. Efforts will be made to raise her.

Stage Robbers Lynched.

REDDING, Cal., July 24.—John D. and Charles Ruggles, brothers, who robbed the Redding stage near here several weeks ago, and killed Messenger Montgomery and wounded the driver and a passenger, were taken from jail by a body of armed men about 2:30 this morning and hanged. The recent sentimental attitude of a number of women towards the prisoners, as well as the line of defense adopted by their counsel, who has evidently been encouraged to implicate Messenger Montgomery as a participant in the crime, had been denounced by a number of persons in the county, and it is believed that the lynching was due to these. About 1 o'clock this morning a body of men, who had evidently had a rendezvous some distance from town, marched through the quiet streets to the court house. The sheriff and his deputies were asleep at home, but the men aroused the jailer and compelled him to accompany them to the sheriff's office and forced him to divulge the fact that the keys of the jail were in the sheriff's safe. The men spent nearly an hour in opening the safe and finally secured the keys and went to the part of the building occupied as a jail. The cells of the two men were opened and the elder one, John Ruggles, asked the crowd to be lenient to his brother, saying that he was innocent. The brothers were handcuffed, their hands tied behind their backs and they were led from the jail. The party walked several blocks and stopped near the railroad company's large woodshed, where a crossbeam was suspended from two pine trees. The ends of the ropes, which had been placed around the necks of the two men, were thrown across the beam and the men were told that they could make a statement. The brothers had little to say, though John still persisted that the younger one was innocent. In another moment, on a signal from the leader, they were suspended about four feet from the ground. After fastening the ropes the crowd dispensed, and the bodies were left there until cut down by the coroner about 9 o'clock. Passengers on the Oregon train saw them from the car windows dangling in the morning sunlight.

Socialist Disturbance in Brussels.

BRUSSELS, July 24.—The blessing of the banner of the anti-Socialist Clerical League by the bishops in the cathedral to-day was the occasion of a disturbance. After the ceremony a body of Socialists forced their way into the hall where the conference of their opponents was being held. The invaders fiercely attacked the anti-Socialists, numbers of whom were seriously injured and the blessed banner destroyed. Finally the police cleared the hall. A number of arrests were made.

COPENHAGEN, July 25.—Mrs. Ryder, wife of American Consul Henry B. Ryder, is accused of perjury in connection with an alleged attempt of her husband to defraud a Danish family out of 500 kron sent to them by a relative in America. Mr. Ryder is under arrest.

LONDON, July 25.—The results of the British elections have been observed with the greatest interest in the Balkans, and the authorities in those states have hastened to propitiate Mr. Gladstone by prompt congratulations. In Turkey the so-called Reform party has circulated a declaration expressing joy for Gladstone's victory, and asking him to obtain the application of Home Rule to Crete, Armenia, Albania, Arabia and other provinces of the Empire.

Let every enfeebled woman know it! There's a medicine that'll cure her, and the proof's positive!

Here's the proof—if it doesn't do you good within reasonable time, report the fact to its makers and get your money back without a ward—but you won't do it!

The remedy is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—and it has proved itself the right remedy in nearly every case of female weakness. It is not a miracle. It won't cure everything—but it has done more to build-up tired, enfeebled and broken-down women than any other medicine known.

Where's the woman who's not ready for it? All that we've to do is to get the news to her. The medicine will do the rest.

Wanted—Women. First to know it. Second to use it. Third to be cured by it. The one comes of the other.

THE MAN ABOUT TOWN.

SIDEWALKS are presumably made and kept for the convenience and safety of the public. Yet this simple and most reasonable position is continually encroached upon by persons altogether oblivious of the rights of the people. Persons who own vehicles are permitted to pull them across the sidewalk without proper provision being made for the purpose. Consequently as the sidewalk becomes worn and broken it is repaired by some boards being laid athwart in a most unworkmanlike manner, and being a positive source of danger to the passer-by. A reasonable rule of all large cities is to compel all persons using the sidewalk for such purposes to have it specially prepared at their own expense. All over the city the sidewalks are being misused in this way.

There is no doubt that the sewerage works is a step in the right direction. It is, however, only one step. Compulsory powers should be taken by the corporation to compel all owners having buildings abutting upon any completed drain, to connect therewith. But one of the most fruitful sources of disease and a standing menace to the health of the city are the open box drains to be found everywhere over our city. A gentleman renting a house on Yates street, showed me yesterday an open drain in his house, where all waste water passed through, positively reeking with an ill smell. These drains should be made under the supervision of the sanitary officers and in all cases should be fitted with a bell-trap or other appliances known to modern science. Victoria should throw off the lethargy of the past and take first rank in these important sanitary matters.

I see my old friend, Rev. J. Pedley, is posing as a Vancouver patriot. Under the guise of a sermon upon religious matters, he is really fanning the flame of a popular blunder. He is too intelligent not to know that the position that Vancouver has taken up is an absurd one. Because 50 or 60 cases of smallpox have developed in a city of 23,000 inhabitants, about ¼ of 1 per cent., is this a reason for the flaming patriots of a neighbor city to act as if reason itself had tottered from its throne? Commerce must be stopped, interchange of commodities barred, tourists must be impounded, ships interfered with, and a state of siege proclaimed. Ridiculous, Mr. Pedley, and you know it. And do you know, reverend sir, it ill becomes a minister of the gospel to degrade his high office and become the mere panderer to a popular cry? Nobility of character is sometimes seen in standing alone, true heroism in being in the minority. The platitudes and generalities of a sermon on "the unjust judge" neither elicit truth nor remove danger. Victoria would help Vancouver in any and every reasonable precaution. Victoria will examine medically and interrogatively every passenger that seeks to travel. Vancouver may again reiterate the same precautions, and the latter city no more than the former is anxious to bar the progress of the disease. Did you ever see a number of women get scared in the presence of a mouse? One ran to the nearest closet and pulled the door, another jumped on the nearest chair, another screamed and several fainted. I advise Vancouver folks to "see themselves as others see them," and Mr. Pedley to regulate the "kodak." All the same, I regret the sarcastic remark of Justice Crease and I think that probably the worthy judge himself does likewise on sober reflection.

I utter my most vehement protest at the senseless way in which Dr. Wade is treating many of the suspects. The record of the last few days at Ross Bay supports the protest. Persons who in all human probability would never take the disease are indiscriminately mingled with others who, in all probability would take it. I do not wonder, therefore, that there is a general resolve expressed by many that should they be suspected they will not be taken to Ross Bay, and Dr. Wade knows full well that he has met with more than one flat refusal to go, and such persons, having both law and might on their side have been allowed to stay at home. Yet in the case of the weaker sex, this is what happened. A lady in a quarantined house having been 13 days quarantined, and exhibiting no symptoms of the disease is compelled against her will to go to Ross Bay. She stays there 24 hours, is released, and goes back to her former abode. Can official red-tapeism and rigid medical regulations be applied more foolishly than this?

QUIZ.

Cheering for Bismarck.

BERLIN, July 24.—An immense demonstration in honor of Bismarck was held at Kissengen to-day. A special train carried thousands to Kissengen. Replying to an address, Bismarck said the ovation was as no minister had ever before received, and he regarded it as a tribute to his work. His friends had advised him to keep silent, but he would not allow his mouth to be closed. He concluded by joining in cheers for the emperor, the empire, the rienstag and the bundesrath.

LONDON, July 24.—The Times prints an interview which its correspondent in Lucerne obtained with Count Waldersee at Engleburg. In this interview Waldersee denied that he had made efforts to reconcile the Emperor and Bismarck and that he was intriguing against Chancellor von Caprivi. His last visit to Friedrickstadt was made to convey the Czar's wishes to the prince, and no reference was made to a reconciliation.

Carnegie's Position.

PITTSBURG, July 25.—All efforts to communicate with Mr. Carnegie on the subject of the shooting of Frick, have been futile. At Bannock Lodge, Mr. Carnegie is 35 miles from the nearest telegraph and railway station, and appears to have deliberately cut himself off from the outside world for the present, and even from the friends with whom he was in frequent intercourse by mail or telegraph. At a meeting in London, yesterday, of the Labor Representative League, a resolution was adopted condemning the course of Carnegie in regard to the Homestead troubles. The resolution added that should Carnegie insult British workmen by further philanthropic efforts in their behalf it was hoped they would show their detestation of him by contemptuously refusing to accept his offers.

LONDON, July 25.—St. James Gazette says:—What most people are anxious to know now that Mr. Frick, the manager of the Carnegie Company, has been injured, is whether Mr. Carnegie will consider the position serious enough to warrant his return.

OUR NEIGHBORS' CROPS.

Prospects of a Wheat Shortage in Oregon and Washington.

From the Oregonian.]

On July 15 A. M. Crocker, manager of R. G. Dun & Co.'s mercantile agency, sent circulars to a large number of their correspondents in the grain sections of Oregon and Washington, asking for their co-operation in forming statistics regarding grain. Answers were received from 95 correspondents, who, with few exceptions, state that the acreage of wheat has decreased, and the yield will be short compared with last year. The heavy spring rains and the hot weather which ensued are in many cases the cause of the shortage. The Western Oregon crop was not damaged to such an extent as that of Eastern Oregon. Early sown wheat is turning out better than was expected, but it is not up to last year's crop and is below the average. The Western Oregon wheat crop of 1891 amounted to 8,500,0000 bushels, and it is estimated that this year's crop will be from 15 to 20 per cent. below these figures. Late grain in Eastern Oregon is doing better than was expected. The grain crop of 1891 amounted to 5,500,000 bushels, and this year there will be a falling-off of from 25 to 35 per cent. In Clackamas, Douglas, Gilliam, Jackson, Josephine, Linn, Yamhill, Washington, Lane, Marion and Polk counties there is an increase in the acreage of wheat and oats, but a decrease in the yield. Late-sown grain has been greatly benefited by the recent rains, and is turning out better than was expected. There are between 70,000 and 80,000 bushels of old wheat in these counties, at a low estimate. The grain in Umatilla, Wasco and Wallowa counties was badly damaged by severe weather in the spring, and burned by the hot winds. The acreage of wheat and oats has increased, but the yield is less than last year.

At Lone Rock, in Gilliam county, there is lots of wheat which is not worth cutting. A low estimate places the total decrease of the Oregon wheat crop, as compared with last year, at 2,800,000 bushels.

There is also a large falling off in the Washington grain crop, but late sown grain has improved remarkably during the past week, the rain having lodged heavy oats and wheat. While the grain was injured by severe weather in the eastern section, a fair yield will be secured in a number of counties. Crops at Lind, Adams county, are a failure. Crops near Prosser, Yakima county, were badly burned by the scorching sun. Grain of all kinds in Stevens county was badly damaged by hot winds. The yield in this county is as large as last year, but is of an inferior quality. The acreage of wheat and oats has increased in Adams, Garfield, Kittitas, Klickitat, Lincoln, Spokane, Stevens, Walla Walla, Whitman and Yakima counties, but the crop has been damaged considerably by severe weather and hot winds, and the yield will be less than last year's. There are about 290,000 bushels of old wheat on hand in Washington.

Should there be a failure in the wheat crop in Oregon and Washington, both states would be in a bad fix. There are about 80,000 bushels of old wheat in Oregon, besides one-sixth and one-eighth of last year's crop in Douglas and Marion counties, respectively. There are also several thousands of bushels in Gilliam county. Some of the correspondents write that in their sections there is hardly enough old wheat on hand to make bread with. Of Washington's 290,000 bushels, 200,000 are stored in Spokane, and 80,000 in Whitman county, besides one-twentieth of the crop of Walla Walla, which is in the farmers' hands.

The business outlook in nearly all the smaller towns in both states is poor, and in some places it is discouraging. Money is scarce and collections are slow. In one or two places in Eastern Oregon it will take this year's crop to pay the debts, and there will be nothing left for business. As a general rule, the outlook in the larger towns is very bright.

More About Captain Stairs.

LONDON, July 24.—The Times says that Marquis de Beauchamp, colleague of Captain Stairs and Captain Bodson in the ill-fated Catanga expedition, have landed at Marseilles. He describes how the Meiris attacked the expedition, and how Stairs sent Bodson to King Meiri to parley with him. Meiri was about to kill Captain Bodson when the latter, in self-defence, shot Meiri. Bodson was then himself killed by natives. The expedition was for twenty-six days without food except ants and locousts. Captain Stairs died at Shinde. One hundred and ninety natives attached to the expedition also perished.

BILL'S PISTOL PRACTICE.

In a Jolly Mood He Shot a Fly Off the Nose of a German Grocer.

The principal characters before Judge Love, of the police court, one morning were Bill Fox, a cowboy from Texas, and Hans Jacobs, the keeper of a combination saloon and grocery on Minna street, between Fourth and Fifth.

Bill was in the dock, dressed only as good cowboys are in the habit of dressing. His slouch hat was under his arm, and his long, flowing hair was somewhat matted for the want of a comb. The usual revolver in his belt was absent, however, and in consequence he wore an air of disgust, which plainly said that he considered himself only half a man without it.

Hans Jacobs wanted him charged with assault to murder, and in order to get a warrant he had to tell the court about it.

"Well, Mr. Jacobs, what do you want this warrant for?" asked Prosecuting Attorney Colton.

"Vell, he vas shoot at me last night."

"Who shot at you?" asked Mr. Colton.

"Dot man dare mit de long hair. He vas a vild cowboy."

"What did he shoot at you for?"

"Yoost to make me some fun, he said."

"How did it happen?"

"Vell, you see, he comes in my shtore und he said gif him er drink. I says you have glass bock beer und he says yes—kvick. I draws de beer and puts it mit de counter on, ven he roars like one of dose Texas steers und kick de beer fon de counter. I told him I don't like dot business und he could dake his drade away. By jimminie, he bulls out a great pig gun und says: 'Trow out er bottle of tarantula yuce mit a horned toad in it.'"

"Did you obey?"

"I didn't have got no such shtuff in de shtore."

"Then what did you do?"

"I doldt him don't shoot. I vould dry to get some, und ven I vas lookin bang! vent his gun, und I daught dat my nose vas shoot avay."

"Did you run out then?"

"No; I shtarted, but he says come back mit you or I makes a pig hole in you vot a dog jumps trough."

"Did he shoot again?"

"No; I gif him visky, an ask him vot for he shoots me. He says dare vos a fly fun my nose, und he kilt him."

"Was there any one else present?"

"No, sir."

"Why didn't you blow a police whistle?"

"I vos going to, but he said he vould plow too."

"Blow what?"

"De top of my hett off."

"Then you did not blow?"

"I should schmile not," said Mr. Jacobs with a shrug of his shoulders. "Ven he drinks a pottle of my visky he goes oud, und I don't see him some more tell he vas arrested in anoder saloon.

"What have you to say to all this, Bill Fox of Texas?" inquired the court.

Bill arose slowly to his feet and looked as picturesque as a bandit chief as he exclaimed:

"Shoot that thing, jedge? Why, I'd no more waste good ammunition on him than I would on a laughing jackass. I may have brushed a fly off his nose if I had had my revolver, but I find myself this morning a long way from home without my trusty weapon."

"You may do twenty-four hours," said the court, "and in the meantime I will see about this game of shooting flies off the noses of German grocers."

"Well, I didn't touch him anyhow," said Bill sulkily as he returned to prison below.—San Francisco Post.

BURKE AND HARE.

The Days of the Notorious Edinburgh Murderers Recalled by Dr. Jones' Death.

The recent death in London of the eminent Dr. Thomas Wharton Jones, fellow of the Royal Society, says the New York Ledger, recalls a once famous scandal which for a time had a maleficent effect upon medical science. In 1827, when but nineteen or twenty years of age, Jones was one of the chief assistants of Robert Knox, the famous lecturer on anatomy in Edinburgh. About Christmas, 1827, there died in the house of a man named Hare an old pensioner named Donald, owing his landlord about £4, and it occurred to Hare that by selling the body to the anatomists he might recoup himself. This suggestion he confided to one Burke, promising him a share in the proceeds, and in the evening the two men visited Knox's classrooms and negotiated the sale of the body for the sum of £7 10s. The money was paid by Jones, who, unsuspecting the crimes which were to follow, jocosely remarked:

"He would be glad to see them again when they had another body to dispose of."

The ease and success of this first transaction with the anatomists soon led Hare and his too willing tool, Burke, to the perpetration of a series of cruel and heartless murders by suffocation, the discovery of which, at the beginning of November, 1828, startled and shocked the civilized world and made Burke's name an active verb in the English language. The bodies of the murdered victims were sold by Burke and Hare to Knox for the purpose of anatomy. The public indignation on the discovery of the murders was so great that many persons did not hesitate to charge Knox and his assistant with being privy to the murders and prejudiced the people of Europe and America against the practice of dissection. Burke, however, declared in the condemned cell, on January 21, 1829, that "Dr. Knox never encouraged him to murder any person, nor any of his assistants." A committee of investigation, with the Marquis of Queensberry at its head, was formed at the request of Knox to inquire into the truth or falsehood of the rumors in circulation, and it reported, what every rational person anticipated, that it had seen no evidence "that Dr. Knox or his assistant knew that murder was committed in procuring any subjects brought to his rooms, and the committee firmly believe that they did not."

THE JUDGMENT.

However Vancouver people may regard the decision of Hon. Justice Crease in the contempt case, it will surely commend itself to all men endowed with common sense and a sense of justice. The judge has taken a lenient view of the offence committed by the Vancouver authorities, and Victorians generally will be glad to know that he has found himself in a position to do so. There are very few in this city who would have rejoiced in seeing any punishment inflicted, though it must be admitted that they have been offered plenty of provocation to anger. Had Victorians possessed the same nasty disposition and malicious desire to do injury that the Vancouver people have shown there would undoubtedly have been a hostile reception here for Mayor Cope and his partners in sin, while the judge would have been subjected to all sorts of abuse, lay and clerical, because he did not send the culprits to jail forthwith. It is to be hoped that the fiery people on the shore of Burrard Inlet will profit by the good example set them here and conduct themselves more rationally in future. And if they sit down calmly and examine the situation they will soon see how far they were wrong and the judge was right in respect of both law and equity. There is no provision in either the Provincial or Dominion health regulations which could warrant them in placing in quarantine for 14 days a man travelling, say from Victoria to Montreal; all they have the power to do, is to see that the precautions prescribed by the regulations are taken.

If the Vancouverites are at all truthful they must admit that there was something vindictive in the pertinacity with which they opposed the ruling of the court and the dictates of common sense. It is also evident that they exaggerated wilfully the extent of the smallpox outbreak here, with a view of affording themselves a pretext for endeavoring to cut this city off from all communication with the Mainland. We know it is a fact that some of the more sensible and reasonable men in Vancouver were of the opinion from the first that the authorities of that city were "biting off more than they could chew," but they unfortunately had too few listeners, while the firebrands managed to catch the popular ear. The same cool-headed and moderate men were quite well aware that Vancouver was injured and not benefited by the malicious lies and exaggerations circulated concerning this city.

It should not be necessary to point out that all the cities in the province must be injured when exaggerated reports are sent abroad concerning an outbreak of infectious disease in any one of them, and that it should therefore be the duty of the rest to help the infected city and to co-operate with it, not to add all they can to its misfortunes. We suggest to the Mainland cities that they might well look at Nanaimo's experience. That city did not try to establish an absolute quarantine against Victoria, but contented itself with a strict enforcement of the health regulations, yet there has not been a case of smallpox there. To a strict observance of the regulations Victoria could not object, and would certainly not have objected. The authorities here have in fact been doing their best to enforce the regulations, in the interest of other cities as well as their own. For this their only thanks from the Mainland cities was treatment of the meanest and most contemptible kind. New Westminster has now had the good sense to raise the quarantine voluntarily, and Vancouver must do so by order of the court. It would have been very much better for all concerned had that city shown less contumacy.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

The last Canadian Gazette to hand gives further information in regard to the vote in the Chambers of Commerce Congress on Sir Charles Tupper's preferential trade amendment. The main resolution, offered by Mr. Medley, was that "any fiscal union between the Mother Country and her colonies and dependencies, by means of preferential duties, being based on protection, would be politically dangerous and economically disastrous; and that the arrangement which, more than any other, would conduce to an intimate commercial union, would be by our self-governing colonies adopting, as closely as circumstances will permit, the non-protective policy of the Mother Country." Sir Charles Tupper's amendment in its final form thus read: "That in order to extend the exchange and consumption of the home staple products in every part of the British Empire, a differential duty not exceeding five per cent. should be adopted by the Imperial and Colonial Governments in favor of certain home productions against the imported foreign articles." The vote on the amendment, as previously reported, was first taken by a show of hands, each delegate voting according to his own personal opinions. There were 34 for and 79 against. Sir Charles Tupper then demanded a vote by chambers, each association represented to vote as a unit. This was done, when the showing made was 33 for to 55 against.

It will be apparent to every reader that the chief significance of the division lies in the expression of opinion by the British chambers of commerce, since it is Britain's privilege to grant or withhold a preferential tariff arrangement just as she chooses. It would therefore be hard for the most optimistic advocate of preferential trade to extract comfort from the vote of the British chambers, of which 35 voted against and only 7 for Tupper's proposal, or exactly five to one against. If the chambers were accurately representative of popular opinion this vote would show that there is very small chance of Britain ever adopting the Tupperian scheme, but there is only too good reason to believe that popular opinion is even more hostile than this vote would indicate. Tupper and Howard Vincent will evidently have to labor for many long years before they can convince the people of Great Britain that this preferential trade scheme would be profitable to them. But there is further instruction in the analysis of the colonial vote by chambers, which the Gazette thus gives:

	For.	Against.
Canada	19	2
Australasia	2	9
South and West Africa	0	5
West Indies	4	1
India and the East	1	3
Total Colonial vote	26	20

The Gazette mentions the fact that while the New South Wales delegation voted solidly against the proposal, Premier Dibbs, of that colony, "just fresh from the constituencies," gave it his cordial support. This, the paper thinks, is an indication that the vote of the colonial chambers was not a truly representative one. But making due allowance for this, the fact remains that the colonial vote was far from being unanimously in favor of Tupper's amendment, and who knows how much educative effect in the wrong direction that fact may have in Great Britain? The 19 Canadian boards of trade supporting the amendment were those of Brantford, Halifax, Ingersoll, London, Montreal, New Westminster, Ottawa, Perth, Qu'Appelle, Quebec, St. John, Toronto, Vancouver, Victoria and Winnipeg. Besides these there were delegations representing the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, or French Board of Trade, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Dominion Millers' Association and the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange, which meant a duplication of votes to some extent. The two dissenting bodies from Canada were the Hamilton Board of Trade, represented by Mr. A. T. Wood, and the Woodstock Board, whose delegate was Mr. Speaker Ballantyne. It will be seen from the analysis here given that the colonial vote was not so completely favorable to preferential trade as to be likely to impress the British people very strongly. Tupper and Vincent will need to devote a little time to missionary work in the colonies as well as at home.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It frequently happens that unsigned letters are received on local subjects, which the writers expect to see in the next issue of the TIMES. The name of the writer must accompany every communication; when it is not enclosed the discredited letter is unceremoniously thrown away.

The World makes a comparison of the assessment of Victoria and Vancouver, and claims that for its age the latter city is without a parallel. The total assessment of Victoria is given as $19,066,407 and of Vancouver as $16,885,000. Undoubtedly for its age Vancouver is a remarkably healthy child, and the people of Victoria are pleased to know that its growth has been as solid as it has been rapid. One of the great factors in the progress of Victoria, which since the birth of Vancouver has also been phenomenal, is the fact that it had such a lusty child to feed. And Vancouver, there is no doubt, has received reciprocal benefits from Victoria.

The Mayor of New Westminster has received a proposition from Count d'Etanges—who writes from Montreal and who may be a nobleman or an adventurer or both combined—to settle two hundred "European farmers" in British Columbia for $400,000 in cash, or lands convertible into cash, as a bonus for his services, and 160 acres of land to be given by the Government to each farmer. Very likely the Count has been reading the Crofter Acts engineered through the British Columbia legislature by the Government, and like a true Frenchman he believes that he can do better for the "European farmer" and incidentally for himself than it is proposed to do for the poor Scotch Crofter and the wealthy English syndicate. One part of the Frenchman's scheme is an improvement at all events. He would give the "farmer" 160 acres of land, which is a great deal more than the crofters will ever receive. The Count should come to Victoria and "stay with" the Government next session.

WHARF AND WAVE.

Jottings of Interest to Marine Men Concisely Compiled.

The tug Lorne is waiting orders at the outer wharf.

Steamer Isabel left this morning for Comox and the islands.

Steamer Palmas is discharging 150 tons of oriental cargo at the outer wharf.

The model of the new E. & N. Railway steamer Joan was made by Mr. R. Colvin, of the Clyde shipyard.

Repairs to the Government steamer Quadra are progressing favorably. She will float about the end of August.

The sealing fleet in Rock Bay is receiving an addition of about one a day, and presents quite an imposing forest of masts at present.

The steamers Princess Louise and Barbara Boscowitz both sail for the north this evening. The former has 4900 empty cases for the Delta cannery.

Work on the San Pedro goes on briskly; the four new pumps can almost empty the compartments in an hour. It is confidently expected that she will be beached this week.

The Chemistry of Fruit.

The following chemical analysis of fruit is of interest, the Horticultural Times thinks, from an economic point of view, now that the value of fruit as an article of diet is becoming more generally understood and appreciated. The figures given will naturally vary from those obtained in the case of fruit grown in different localities, as the character of the soil and the atmosphere causes, as is well known, extreme variation in fruits. For instance, fruit in a dry, hot season will usually contain a much less percentage of water than that of a moist season, even when grown in the same soil, while the proportion of acid varies considerably also with the nature of the soil and climate. But the proportions below hold good generally. It is found that strawberries and raspberries contain 88 per cent. of water, pears and apples 84 to 85 per cent., plums and peaches 80 to 81 per cent., cherries 80 per cent., and grapes 78 per cent. Some of the last-named fruits are, apparently, more watery than pears or apples, and it is interesting to find that these contain from six to seven per cent. more moisture than grapes. There are very little albuminoid matters found in fruits, and still less starch, but carbohydrate—especially in the form of sugar and cellulose—have a fairly large percentage. Grapes, among the fruits already named, contain the largest amount of sugar—14 per cent., as compared with four per cent. in plums, though the latter are rich in pectin matters, and contain even more than apples. The great value of fresh ripe fruits as a dietetic depends on the free acids and alkaline salts, while the flavor and aroma of the fruits themselves are due to the presence, in very minute quantities, of the fatty and ethereal oils. The three acids present in fruit, in the order of their amount, are malic, citric, and tartaric—the first being the most common, though the last exist most largely in grapes. In estimating the food value of fruit, the soluble constituents of dried fruit is taken as a guide, and from this standpoint apples are the most valuable. These contain 88 per cent., grapes 81 per cent., pears 73 per cent., plums 72 per cent., cherries and strawberries 67 per cent., and raspberries 46 per cent. It must, however be remembered that while these figures give the general idea as to the best fruit for food, they are not absolutely conclusive on this point, inasmuch as many of the insoluble substances perform work in the human economy of considerable hygienic value.

Postponed for a Week.

The meeting of the Board of School Trustees which was to have been held this evening has been postponed for a week.

Broken Bridge.

The bridge between Prospect lake and Porter's has fallen down from old age and general rottenness. It is unsafe to attempt a passage of the ravine.

Clothing Wanted.

Donations of clothing for the suspects at the Ross Bay quarantine station will be received at the station or the sanitary office. There are women, men and children at the station.

The San Francisco Steamer.

The steamer Umatilla arrived from San Francisco at noon to-day and discharged 207 tons of freight—165 tons for Victoria and 42 for Vancouver. She brought up 78 passengers.

Decided at Last.

The motion for a new trial in the case of Turner vs. Prevost was dismissed in the full court yesterday and the decision of the court below was confirmed. A few minor cases were also disposed of.

Seized for Smuggling.

The Vancouver steam yacht Sybil was seized near Whidby Island last night by the revenue cutter Wolcott and towed to Port Townsend. Her crew will be charged with smuggling Chinamen into the United States.

Excursionists Coming.

A Grafton excursion party of 40 people and a Reitz party of 19 are now on their way to Victoria to take passage on the steamer Islander for Alaska next Tuesday morning. The Grafton party left Chicago on the 19th inst. by the N.P.R. and will arrive here on August 1st, leaving the next evening for Alaska. They will go home by the C.P.R.

Lacrosse.

There was a large crowd out at the Caledonia Park last night to watch the lacrosse boys practice. The club has now 15 reliable men in good trim, and from these can be picked a stronger team than has ever yet represented Victoria in a match. The team to engage in the match with the Westminsters on Saturday will be selected on Wednesday.

Highly Honored.

Mr. Robert Ward, the delegate of the British Columbia Board of Trade, had the honor of proposing one of the principal toasts of the evening at the banquet given the congress of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire in London. The toast was "The London Chamber of Commerce." Mr. Ward proposed the toast in a manner that did him credit and reflected honor upon the province.

Charged with Assault.

Jas. Wemster, of the bark Ben Nevis, was charged in the Provincial police court this morning with having assaulted James Fraser, one of the seamen, on the 28th of May. Magistrates Dalby and Pearson, who presided, fined the defendant $20 and $5·50 costs, or in default two months' imprisonment. James Anderson, charged with assaulting H. C. Prohn, did not come up.

Several other charges of assault against Wemster were being heard this afternoon.

In the Evening by the Moonlight.

There was a large gathering of pleasure craft on the Arm last evening, and some exciting shootings of the Gorge canoes and such slim vessels bearing fair freight. The various camps along the shores looked very pretty as darkness came on. They are decorated with gay, parti-colored bunting and Chinese lanterns, which latter, when lit in the evening give a pleasing fantastic appearance to the spot. The sounds of music floating from these temporary woodland abodes, proved that care was being driven away with some degree of success.

In the Swim.

There was a little ripple of excitement above the Gorge last night, resulting in the wetting of one of the young men who camp up there. A skiff, which had just run the Gorge, collided with another boat lying alongside of the Victoria Gardens wharf. The latter craft was almost capsized and one of the lacrosse boys who was in it was thrown into the water. He could swim and kept cool under the circumstances—especially when in the water. The loss of a carpet slipper was the most serious result of the accident.

The Funeral at Matsqui.

The funeral of the late Alexander Purver, who was drowned in the creek on Matsqui Prairie last Thursday evening, while attempting to save the life of Miss Jay, of Victoria, was held on Sunday from the family residence to the new graveyard near Sumas. The service was conducted by Rev. Mr. King in a very impressive manner. He commented in feeling language on the bravery of the young man in giving up his life to save his friend. After Mr. King had finished the burial service of the Church of England, the Odd Fellows, to which order the deceased belonged, performed their ritual. More than 200 persons were present, some of them coming over 25 miles.

Three Sailors Sent Up.

A trial of more than ordinary interest took place at the outer wharf yesterday, where three sailors of the steamer Pelmas named Frank Nicholles, Robert Carwell and W. Beck were arrested on a charge of mutiny. Police Magistrate Macrae held court, a large box doing duty as a bench, the defendants occupying positions on the wharf while the witnesses for the prosecution (the officers of the vessel) remained on board the steamer. Of course there was a large audience to witness the proceedings. It seems that the defendants had some difficulty with the captain at Honolulu, where they walked ashore and invited the chief officer of the vessel to meet them on shore and they would punch his head. The language in which the challenge was made of course was in nautical terms. After hearing the evidence the magistrate sentenced Carwell and Beck to one month's imprisonment with hard labor and Nicholles to two weeks without labor, and they were immediately taken to the provincial jail.

Dr. Geo. H. T. Sparling, the Seattle health officer, has decided to maintain the quarantine against Victoria for two days longer. Up to date no case of smallpox has been discovered in Seattle

A Contemplated Excursion.

If the Vancouver quarantine is not raised before Saturday, it is possible that the C.P.N. Company will run the Yosemite to New Westminster on that day to accommodate the lacrosse boys and their friends. A large number of Victorians would go up if the steamer is put on.

Drunk Again.

Mike Roberts was picked up on Yates street by Officer Smith to-day and placed in the city cooler on a charge of being drunk. The prisoner protested vigorously against going with the officer, using language not at all parliamentary, and had to be handcuffed before he could be persuaded to go.

American Schooner Seized.

The schooner Rose Sparks, Captain McLean, arrived at San Francisco last week from the North with but fifteen skins. She reported that the San Francisco schooner Seventy-six had been seized in Behring sea. From this it would appear that American schooners are breaking the laws while British schooners obey them.

Fire at the Douglas House.

An alarm from box 13 called out the fire brigade this afternoon at 10 minutes to 3 o'clock. Dense smoke issuing from the kitchen of the Douglas House showed where the fire was located. A stream was soon turned on and the flames which had begun to work between the roof and the ceiling of the building were soon extinguished. Fifty dollars will cover the loss.

On the Search.

Mr. David Hart received a telegram to-day from C. J. Miller, who has been in Spokane looking for a trace of Mr. Morris Moss for the past week. The telegram states that a clue has been obtained, which will be followed up, and in a few days it is confidently expected that something definite will be known. The friends of the missing gentleman are now convinced that he is still alive and that in good time he will be found all right.

WHAT HAS THE SADIE DONE?

The Bridgekeeper Refuses to Open the Swing Bridge for the Steamer.

One would judge that as soon as a steamer blew her four whistles to have the E. & N. Railway bridge opened, the bridgekeeper would do his best to open the bridge immediately and not cause any inconvenience. But from what masters of steamers say, this must be far from what actually is the case. Several captains have complained of the length of time that the keeper takes to move the bridge, but never have they had such good reasons to do so as had Captain Barry, of the steamer Sadie.

Yesterday afternoon the Sadie, which is tending on the San Pedro, had occasion to go to Spratt's wharf. The bridge was open on the way in, but the trouble occurred on the way back. Before leaving Spratt's wharf the customary four whistles were blown and Captain Barry thinking this was sufficient started to come down the harbor. The bridge, however, did not move, so about fifteen minutes was spent in blowing whistles. By this time the Sadie had arrived within speaking distance of the bridge and Captain Barry asked the bridge keeper, a man named Martin, why he did not open the bridge.

The keeper answered that he was not going to open the bridge but that Captain Barry would have to take his mast out.

The captain answered that he would take his mast out when he felt like it.

The keeper thereupon said that he would not open the bridge for the likes of him, meaning Captain Barry, anyway.

Mr. Richards, chief engineer of the San Pedro, who was on the Sadie at the time, landed at the railway wharf and telephoned to the railway company's office and stated the facts of the case to the clerk. The clerk said that there were some orders not to let the Sadie through, but he nevertheless telephoned to Mr. Dunsmuir who sent a message to the railway office. The result of this was that a message was sent to the bridge keeper to let the Sadie through as she could not get her mast out. When the message was handed to the keeper, he said something about orders being given and then changed, but he nevertheless opened the bridge and the Sadie went through.

The marine men are now very anxious to know who has got authority to refuse to open the bridge for any particular steamer, or to say that the captain of such steamer shall go to the trouble to remove his mast to save the bridge keeper a little work? They are of opinion that an immediate investigation should be held.

The marine law makes its compulsory for a steamer to carry a mast, and it cannot be expected that a captain shall remove his mast every time he goes through the bridge. The Sadie, it is true, had her mast out for some time when she had to make daily trips between the outer wharf and the Albion Iron Works, but in doing so she was not obeying the marine laws to the letter.

Mr. Richards, of the San Pedro, told a TIMES reporter to-day that quite a sum had been spent for expressage to save the bridgekeeper the trouble of opening up for the Sadie, and he could not see why the bridge was not opened for her.

The Sadie had a scow in tow at the time, which she had to let loose.

Victorians Well Pleased With the Action of the Westminster Council.

The Mayor and City Council of New Westminster came in for a good share of praise to-day for their action in raising the quarantine against Victoria and on all sides it is expected that within a few days all ports will be open to Victoria. Several passengers who went to New Westminster yesterday afternoon were allowed to go around as usual. The reports of the health officers give full particulars of the changes during the twenty-four hours ending at noon to-day.

Dr. Davie's Report.

Following is the bulletin issued last evening:—

PROVINCIAL HEALTH OFFICE,
Midnight, July 25, 1892.

Nanaimo—No cases in city or district.

New Westminster—Two cases in city and two in district.

Vancouver—No report received. Saturday's report nine cases.

Vancouver District, Hastings—No report received. Last night one case. Moodyville—No report received. Last report one case.

City of Victoria—No cases.

Albert Head quarantine station, thirteen miles from Victoria, two cases.

Jubilee hospital quarantine station: Saturday, midnight, fifty-one cases. Two deaths occurred on Sunday, Miss Bull and Mr. Wetter, leaving forty-nine patients. Three cases were received from the Albert Head quarantine station. One of the ambulance drivers developed the disease in the quarantine station, and six cases have developed amongst the suspects, all of which cases were immediately removed to the Jubilee quarantine hospital, making to-night a total of fifty-nine cases in that establishment. All suspects are now at Ross Bay suspect station, two miles and a half from the city. No cases of smallpox have developed in the City of Victoria or surrounding districts other than suspects since July 21. Dr. Hassell has been appointed superintendent and resident medical officer at the Ross Bay station, where the presence of such an officer was urgently needed.

Complete suits of clothes for men, women and children are urgently needed, both at the Jubilee hospital quarantine station and the Ross Bay suspect station, as all the clothes now worn by the "suspect"s and patients will be burned.

J. C. DAVIE, M.D.,
Provincial Health Officer.

Health Officer's Report.

At noon to-day Dr. Wade, the municipal health officer, reported one new case, the victim being a man named Allen, of Spring Ridge. There were no deaths and no new cases among the suspects up to that time. The patients are all doing well.

What the Patients Say.

The following letter was sent to the provincial authorities to-day:

ALBERT HEAD QUARANTINE STATION,
July 22nd, 1892.

To the Hon. the Premier and Provincial Health Officer:

We, the smallpox patients who have been nursed and cared for at this station, feeling the benefit received by the valuable services of Mr. Charles Tite, who has been engaged by Mr. Lilley as a private nurse. Mr. Tite, besides doing his own work, has taken a special interest in every patient in the ward, and has proved himself to be a practical nurse in this disease. He has had a few years experience in nursing smallpox patients in San Francisco. He divided up what medicine he had amongst every patient, and there are one or two who really owe their lives to him, and who are now doing well. We, therefore, think that he should not be passed by unnoticed, but that he should be suitably remembered. So we ask your honorable body if you will not give him what he justly deserves. The following are the names of the patients: (Signed) Herbert A. Lilley, Adam Ritchie, William Nelson, Jno. Hackman, William Barry, Sandy N. Williams, B. H. Marsh.

A TESTIMONIAL.

I, William Western, can testify that Mr. Tite has saved my life after I had jumped into the sea, while delirious, and then the Odd Fellows sent me a private nurse, and I am now doing well.
(Signed) WILLIAM WESTERN.

This is to certify that I have found Mr. C. H. Tite to be an efficient and experienced nurse, and was of great service at Albert Head. (Signed)
ERNEST CROMPTON.

An Enquiry From Halifax.

Ex-Mayor Grant received the following telegram to-day:

HALIFAX, N.S., July 26.

Mayor Grant, Victoria:
Is danger from smallpox over? Party here wishes to start. C. P. R. Tel. Office.

The following reply was sent:

VICTORIA, July 26.

C. P. R. Telegraph Office, Halifax:
Health officer thinks danger over. No new cases in city proper. Old cases all removed.
JOHN GRANT, Ex-Mayor.

That's What's Wanted.

Mr. W. Denny this afternoon sent a dozen new suits of clothes and a dozen suits of underclothing and a number of other necessary articles to the quarantine station. Those patients who can ill afford to lose their clothes, which of course will have to be burned, will find these donations very acceptable.

The Quarantine Inspector.

J. B. Lynch, Dominion quarantine inspector, says he has inspected the Albert Head quarantine station and found a great many improvements were needed to put it in an efficient condition. This would be done immediately, and Albert Head with the addition of the steamer Earle, which was to be fitted at once with the most modern fumigating machinery, would be in the most efficient condition. Mr. Lynch has prepared a report for the Dominion government on the quarantine station, and a reference to the manner in which the smallpox had first gained hold in the province.

ADJOURNED AGAIN.

The Bowack Case Laid Over Until To-Morrow for Another Affidavit.

The case of Geo. Bowack versus the Corporation of the City of Vancouver, came up at 10 o'clock this morning in the Supreme Court, before Mr. Justice Walkem, and was adjourned until 2:30 p. m. at the request of Mr. Bodwell, one of the counsel for the appellant.

His lordship took occasion to explain that he was not sitting as a court of appeal against Mr. Justice McCreight, as had been stated in the TIMES last evening. What he had said was that the appellant could carry the case from judge to judge and from court to court. His lordship stated that during the adjournment he would carefully examine the affidavits produced by Mr. Bodwell. A judge ought to as hastily as possible, consistent with justice, dispose of those cases of habeas corpus. In this case he had to deal only with a person who had been, as he alleged, illegally detained in a building at Vancouver. The question he had to consider was very easy, namely, whether a passenger walking from a steamer boating in Dominion waters into the limits of a municipality could be legally detained. He would examine the by-law thoroughly.

The case was resumed at 3 o'clock, when Mr. Wilson, for the appellant, produced the affidavit of Dr. J. C. Davie, certifying that in his opinion Victoria was not an infected locality on the 13th of July to such an extent as to prevent persons going to other points, unless they had been brought in direct contact with the said disease. Mr. Wilson contended that the corporation of Vancouver had a right to detain a man's clothing but not his body if no disease were found upon it. A second affidavit from an agent of the C.P.N. Co. showed that Bowack was a through passenger to Toronto, and had no intention of remaining in Vancouver. An affidavit from a land surveyor as to the location of the wharf, produced some discussion as to whether Bowack was arrested ashore in the city limits or in Dominion domain. Mr. Wilson said the map produced showed that where the water was was colored blue. His Lordship said he knew something about surveying and working the theodolite. Water in a survey map was always represented by blue coloring. He could not accept the map as evidence.

The court finally adjourned until ten to-morrow morning, to allow Mr. Pooley to obtain an affidavit from Mr. Huntley, health officer of Vancouver, as to exactly when Bowack was arrested on the Vancouver wharf.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL.

Alex. Trembley Will Have to Stand Trial for the Larceny of a Watch.

Alex. Trembley was this morning summoned before Magistrate Macrae on a charge of the larceny of a gold watch and chain worth $205 and $100 in coin from Joseph St. Arno. Trembley pleaded not guilty and was represented by Mr. Walls.

The complainant testified that on Sunday last the defendant visited his room at the Telegraph hotel. He got very drunk and did not have a clear recollection of what happened. He knew he had $225 in gold and some paper money in a small purse. The purse dropped on the floor and the gold coin rolled around, and the prisoner helped him to pick it up. The watch was left in his vest hanging up over the bed. The watch and chain were there when the prisoner came in, but he noticed about half past five after the prisoner was gone, the money was also gone.

Mrs. St. Arno, who appeared with a scratched face, testified that she was in the room with her husband and the prisoner on the afternoon of the 24th. The prisoner sat near the bed and near where the watch was hanging. Her husband dropped his purse on the floor and the gold rolled around. She went to pick it up and the prisoner shoved her away; but she saw him pick up some of the money and put it in his pocket. The prisoner and "the old man" went out for about half an hour, and when her husband came back his face was all over blood. There was $225 in gold in the purse before the old man dropped it, and afterwards there was only $125. She had not been drinking and was not fighting with her husband. She saw her husband take the watch out when he went with the prisoner, and she remarked when he came back that the watch and chain were gone. She admitted that before marrying St. Arno she had lived for a time with another man.

The prisoner made a statement denying the charge. He said he visited the complainant on an invitation to go and see an old Frenchman who had just come down from the north with a young bride.

The court committed Trembley to stand his trial at the next competent court.

FOR HEALTH PURPOSES.

Aldermen to Ask Leave to Introduce Important By-laws.

There are three notices on the bulletin board at the City Hall, two of which are of a good deal of importance, especially at the present time.

The first is a notice given by Alderman McKillican of his intention to ask leave at to-morrow evening's sitting of the city council, to introduce a by-law to raise $50,000 for the use of the Board of Health.

The same alderman gives notice that he will ask leave to introduce a by-law to raise the sum of—— to provide a site and for the erection and maintenance of a municipal hospital. He has not yet decided how much he will ask the people to provide for this purpose.

Ald. Lovell gives notice that he will ask leave to introduce a by-law to repeal certain by-laws and parts of by-laws.

A meeting of the board of health was held this morning to discuss various matters. The above notices are supposed to have resulted from the meeting.

Will Sign To-Night.

The preliminary agreement between Mr. R. P. Rithet for the Canada Western Railway Company, and the Chicago capitalists, will be signed this evening. The gentlemen interested of course cannot say anything about what is contained in the agreement until after it is signed.

NADA THE LILY.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

[Copyright, 1892, by Tillotson & Son and published by special arrangement with them.]

CHAPTER XXX.

ZINITA COMES TO THE KING.

Whilst Dingaan the king sat upon a day in the kraal Umgugundhlovu, one came near, saying that a woman craved leave to speak upon some great matter.

"Let her come," he answered.

Presently the woman was led in.

"What is thy errand?" asked the king.

"I ask blood, O king."

"The blood of whom?"

"The blood of Bulalio the Slaughterer, chief of the People of the Ax; the blood of Nada the Lily and of all those who cling to her."

"What!" he cried, "does the Lily then live, as the captain thought?"

"She lives, O king. She is wife to the Slaughterer, and has put me, his first wife, away."

For a little while Dingaan sat astounded.

Then Zinita drew near and told Dingaan the tale of the birth of Umslopogaas and all that followed; and by many a token and many a deed of T'Chaka's that he remembered, Dingaan the king knew that it was a true tale.

When at length she had done he summoned the captain of the regiment that stood around. He was a great man named Faku, and he also summoned certain men who do the king's bidding. To the captain of the impi he spoke straightly, saying:

"Take three companies and guides and come by night to the town of the People of the Ax that is by Ghost mountain, and burn it and slay all the wizards who sleep therein. Most of all, slay the chief of the people, who is named Bulalio the Slaughterer, or Umslopogaas. Slay him by torture if you may, but slay him and bring his head to me. Take that wife of his who is known as Nada the Lily alive, if ye may, and bring her to me, for I would cause her to be slain here. Bring the cattle also. Now go, and go swiftly, this hour. If ye return having failed in one jot of my command ye die, every one of you—ye die, and slowly. Begone!"

The captain saluted and running to his regiment issued a command. Three full companies leaped forward at his word and ran after him through the gates of the kraal Umgugundhlovu, heading for the Ghost mountain.

Then the king commanded those who do his bidding that they should take the children of Zinita and slay them. Presently they slew her also.

* * * * * *

Galazi sat on the lap of the Stone Witch and gazed idly toward the kraal of the People of the Ax, and as he gazed his eyes caught a gleam of light that seemed to travel in and out of the edge of the shadow of Ghost mountain. He started and watched. It was a little impi running in companies, and each man had assegai and shield.

Now Galazi knew well that these were the king's dogs and their game was men, a big kraal of sleeping men, otherwise there had been fewer dogs. Galazi wondered whom they sought. Ah! Now they turned to the ford and he knew. It was his brother Umslopogaas and Nada the Lily and the People of the Ax. These were the king's dogs, and Zinita had let them slip.

Galazi bounded to his feet. From bowlder to bowlder he leaped like a buck, he crashed through the brake like a bull, he skimmed the level like a swallow. The mountain was done with now; there in front lay the river, foaming in its flood. Ah! a good leap far into the torrent. It is strong, but he breasts it. He is through, and away up the narrow gorge of stone to the long slope.

Before him is the town. Ah! they are there. He sees moving through the grass the long line of the Slayers. Six spear throws to run and they have but such a little way! The mealie plants are tall and at a spot they almost touch the fence. He is there, hidden by the mealie stalks, and there along the fence to the right and to the left the Slayers creep!

"Wow! What was that?" said one man of the king to another man, as they joined their guard, completing the death circle. "Wow! Something great and black crashed through the fence before me."

"I heard it, brother," answered the other man.

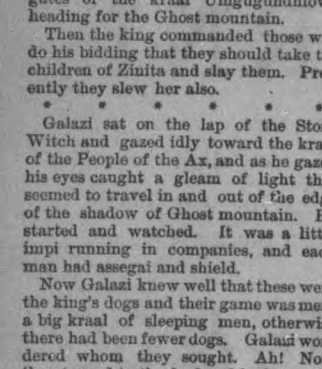
"Is your fire ready, brother? Wow! These wizards shall wake warm! The signal should be soon."

Then arose the sound of a great voice, crying:

"Awake, ye sleepers! The foe is at your gates!"

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE END OF THE PEOPLE BLACK AND GRAY.



Then he must set Nada on his shoulders.

Galazi rushed through the town crying aloud, and behind him rose the stir of men. All were asleep and no sentinel was set, for Umslopogaas was so lost in his love for the Lily that he forgot his wisdom and thought no more of war or death or the hate of Dingaan. Presently the Wolf came to the large new hut which Umslopogaas had caused to be built for Nada the Lily, and there he entered, for there he knew he should find his brother Bulalio. On the far side of the hut the two lay sleeping, and the head of Umslopogaas rested on the Lily's breast, and by his side gleamed the great ax Groanmaker.

"Awake!" cried the Wolf.

Now Umslopogaas sprang to his feet, grasping at the ax, but Nada threw her arms wide, murmuring, "Let me sleep on; sweet is sleep."

"Sound shall you sleep anon," gasped Galazi. "Swift, brother, bind on the wolf's hide, take shield! Swift, I say! The Slayers of the king are at the gates."

Now Nada sprang up also. Tongues of flame shot up against the sky, for the town was fired by the Slayers.

Umslopogaas looked and understood. "Which way, brother?" he said.

"Through them to our gray people on the mountain," said Galazi.

"What of my people in the kraal?" asked Umslopogaas.

"I have wakened the men; most will escape. Hence, ere we burn!"

Now men joined them to the number of ten. They ran together toward the fence of the town, that was now but a ring of fire, Umslopogaas and Galazi in front, each holding the Lily by a hand. They neared the fence. Lo! it was afire. Nada shrank back in fear, but Umslopogaas and Galazi dragged her on. They rushed at the blazing fence. It broke before them. Without were a knot of the Slayers standing back a small space because of the heat of the fire. The Slayers saw them, and crying, "This is Bulalio! Kill the wizard!" sprang toward them with uplifted spears. Now the People of the Ax made a ring around Nada, and in the front of it were Umslopogaas and Galazi. Then they rushed on and met those of the Slayers who stood before them, and were through with but one man slain, but the cry went up that the chief of the wizards and the Lily, his wife, had fled. Then the captain called off the Slayers from watching for the dwellers in the town and started in pursuit of Umslopogaas.

Meanwhile the Wolf Brethren and those with them were well away, and were half way down the gorge that led to the river before the companies of the Slayers poured into it. Now they came to the end of it and the foe was near. Then Galazi stopped and spoke:

"Halt, ye People of the Ax," he said, "and let us talk awhile with these who follow till we find our breath again. But you, my brother, pass the river with the Lily in your hand. We will join you in the forest, but if perchance we cannot find you, you know what must be done. Set the Lily in the cave, then return and call up the gray impi. Go now, my brother."

"It is not my way to turn and run while others stand and fight," growled Umslopogaas, "yet because of Nada it seems that I must."

"Oh, heed me not, my love," said Nada. "I have brought thee sorrow. I am weary; let me die. Slay me and save yourselves."

For answer Umslopogaas took her by the hand and fled toward the river, yet before he reached it he heard the sounds of the fray.

Now they had leaped into the foaming river, and here it was well that the Lily could swim, else had both been lost. But they won through and passed on to the mountain flank. Here they walked on in the forest, till at length Umslopogaas heard the howling of a wolf.

Then he must set Nada on his shoulders and carry her as once Galazi had carried another, for it was death for any to walk on the Ghost mountain save the Wolf Brethren only.

Presently the wolves flocked around him and leaped upon him in joy, glaring with fierce eyes at her who sat upon his shoulders. Nada saw them and well nigh fell from her seat fainting with fear, for they were many and dreadful, and when they howled her blood turned to ice.

But Umslopogaas cheered her, telling her that these were his dogs with whom he went a-hunting. At length they came to the knees of the Old Witch and the entrance of the cave.

"Here you must bide, sweet," said Umslopogaas when he had driven out the wolves. "Here you must bide till this little matter of the Slayers is finished. See! Now I will show you the secret of the stone; thus far I will push it, and no farther. Now a touch only is needed to send it over the socket and home—but then they must be two strong men who can pull it back again. Therefore push it no farther, except in the utmost need, lest it remain where it fall whether you will it or not. Have no fear; here you are safe."

Now Nada wept, saying that she feared to be left and that she should never see him more, and her grief wrung his heart. Nevertheless he kissed her and went, closing the stone after him in that fashion of which he had spoken. When the stone was closed the cave was almost dark, except only for a ray of light that entered by a hole little larger than a man's hand that, looked at from within, was on the right of the stone. Nada sat herself so that this ray of light struck full on her, for she loved light and without it she would pine as flowers do. And as she sat thus, suddenly the ray went out and she heard a noise as of some beast that smells at prey. She looked and in the gloom she saw the sharp nose and grinning fangs of a wolf that were thrust toward her through the little hole.

She cried aloud in her fear and the fangs were snatched back, but presently she heard a scratching without the stone and saw the stone shake. Then she thought in her foolishness that the wolf knew how to open the stone and that he would do this and devour her, for she had heard the tale that all these wolves were the ghosts of evil men, having the understanding of men. So in her fear and folly she seized the stone and dragged on as Umslopogaas had shown her the way. It shook, it slipped over the socket ledge and rolled home like a pebble down the mouth of a gourd.

"Now I am safe from the wolves," said Nada. "See, I cannot so much as stir the stone from within and still less can they do so from without," and she laughed a little.

When Umslopogaas had shut the cave he moved swiftly down the mountain and with him went certain of the wolves—not all, for he had not summoned them. Presently he heard a long, low howl far away in the forest. It was the call of Galazi, who had escaped the spears of the Slayers.

Swiftly he ran, calling in answer. He won the place. There, seated on a stone resting himself, was Galazi, and around him surged the numbers of the gray people. He seemed somewhat weary. There were flesh wounds on his great breast and arms, the little shield was well nigh hewn to strips and the Watcher showed signs of war.

"How went it, brother?" asked Umslopogaas.

"None so ill, but all those who stood with me in the way are dead."

"Let us spend the remnant of our people on the foe and fight this fight out, man to man, with no beast to spoil it. Ho! Blood and Greysnout! Ho! Deathgrip! Ho! Wood Dwellers, gray and black, at them, my children!" The wolves heard. For the last time they leaped forth upon the foe, tearing, harrying and slaying till they themselves were slain of the spear, every one of them except Deathgrip alone, who crept back, sorely wounded, to die by Galazi.

* * * * * * *

Umslopogaas, the son of T'Chaka, and Faku, the captain of Dingaan, gazed on each other. They alone were left alive upon the mountain, for the rest were all dead.

Now for awhile the two circled around and around, each waiting for a chance to strike. Presently the Slaughterer lifted Groanmaker and smote the captain, Faku, full on the breast, shattering his bones and sweeping him from the ledge of rock onto the slope beneath, where he lay still.

But Faku was not yet dead. He sat up and with his last strength hurled the ax in his hand. The ax sped true and its sharp point struck Umslopogaas on the left temple, driving in the bone and making a great hole. Then Faku fell back dead.

News of Emin Pasha.

BERLIN, July 24.—Dr. Stuhlmann, Emin Pasha's second in command, writes to Schweinfurth from East Africa denying that Emin Pasha invaded British territory or tried to recover the stores he left at Wadelai, the rebels having seized and carried them off. The fatigues of the marches, says Stuhlmann, sapped Emin's health; his eyesight became so bad that he could not read or write, and he continued to suffer from insomnia and from hemorrhages from an old ear wound. Stuhlmann parted with Emin some distance west of Victoria Nyanza.

The "Flying Dutchman."

One of the most remarkable legends of the sea is due to an atmospheric peculiarity in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope. The air in that region has the extraordinary power of unequal refraction, similar to that known to exist on the boundless prairies of Kansas, Nebraska and the Dakotas. On the great waste of waters which surround Good Hope the phenomenon appears in the shape of spectral looming, or apparent suspension in the air, of ships which are so far away that they cannot be seen on the surface of the water.

These phantomlike ships suspended in midair have given rise to the weird legend of the "Flying Dutchman.", According to the story, which is known to be at least 400 years old, a Dutch captain, homeward bound from the East Indies, met with long continued bad weather, coupled with the wind blowing "dead ahead." At the time when he was making an effort to turn back and seek shelter until the gale was over; but this he refused to do, swearing all the while that he would "turn the cape" or beat there until the day of judgment. For this profanity, according to the tradition, he was doomed to beat against the winds forever.—Philadelphia Press.

What's in a Name?

Some writers still use the French spelling, "Esquimaux," to designate the natives of Greenland. "Eskimos" is the Danish form of the word, and it has now almost wholly superseded the older French spelling, and is undoubtedly preferable. None of the natives, by the way, ever call themselves Eskimos. The native name is Innuit, and the name Eskimos, which was applied to the arctic nomads without their knowledge or consent, is the corruption of a word which is found in nearly the same form in at least two Indian languages of British America, and which means "the people who eat raw flesh."—New York Sun.

WANDERINGS IN CORNWALL.

The Old Town of St. Ives, Famous for Its Connection With an Ancient Rhyme.

Glimpses of Glorious Scenery and Odd Bits of Antiquity on the Cornish Coast.

ST. IVES, Cornwall, June 18.—In the tender realm of nursery rhyme lore there is a no pleasanter mysticism than that which clings to the pretty riddle:

As I was going to St. Ives
I met a man with seven wives.
Each wife had seven sacks;
Each sack had seven cats;
Each cat had seven kits;
Kits, cats, sacks and wives—
How many were there going to St. Ives?

So deep and lasting are the impressions of childhood, that as I tramped around the southern reach of St. Ives bay from the pretty hamlet of St. Earth, I found myself unconsciously scanning the highway far ahead for this same wicked old fellow who has puzzled the heads of millions of little folk. But he was not to be seen any more than the "kits, cats, sacks and wives" are to be taken into account in the older riddle.

In truth, no man, woman or child was visible upon the white and circling highway. St. Earth nestled there silent and apparently deserted against the copse and the hillside. The tide was out in the bay. A few fishermen's boats rocked idly beside mossy old piers. Long reaches of sand showed here and there shining and brown, like the backs of huge marine monsters. Gulls wheeled lazily above. Land and sea fowl chattered in the circling marsh edges or dug in the sand or ooze. Only to the north, through the rift between the headlands, was there single sign of life. On the sapphire blue of the Irish sea there were two far white sails.

But I knew the ancient city lay behind the huge headland, and quickening my pace I soon stood at its sea face and its highest acclivity. Here the highway tumbles into one of the oddest old towns in all Europe.

There are pictures and pictures of the Bay of Naples. But were I an artist, I would stake my hope of renown on the picture I saw as I stood above the bay and ancient town of St. Ives. The bay itself faces the north. At your feet are purple heather and waving ferns parted from the crystalline water by glistening sands. To the right and east the green hillocks of the Eastern shore. Then the broad yellow beach of Porth-cocking or the Fore sand. Dominating this is the great headland of Pednolva. Beyond, gleaming like a field of gold, are the magnificent sands of Portminster, and farther still, the headland and rocky islet of Godrevy, with the latter's white lighthouse setting cameolike between the purple of the seawalls and the tremulous blue of the ocean.

Before you, the silent shimmering bay with a few white winged craft scarcely moving, it seems, the distance is so great from the height where you stand; the ocean beyond shining and blue and still, rhythmic reaches of incoming tide waves, miles in length, advancing and retreating and breaking softly upon the shelving sands in tiny ridges of sparkling spume, and here, to the west, a great mass of jumbled gray—old St. Ives crouching in a little pocket of rocks, like a mass of mossy stone in some shadowy glen, sleeping away the centuries, unconscious of the thunderous sea.

One could almost hurl a stone across its crowded tiled roofs, and yet it houses fully 9,000 people. The streets are so narrow, the pavements so meager, such queer turns are made, such shadowy arcades are penetrated that the surest footed stranger pedestrian will meet many a bump and bang in most careful descent.

Then, when you have reached something like a level, you have simply increased your difficulties. All the lower thoroughfares are scarcely more than shadowy foot paths leading bewilderingly from somewhere to nowhere. This one, opening promisingly, brings you squarely against a solid wall of rock. That one, in half a dozen paces, lands you upon a flat roof from which you may easily step into the harbor a hundred feet beneath. Another winds about a single structure windowless as a Tenth century fortress. Descending another you find a nest of homes whose roofs are the passageway of a street above. Dozens lead squarely into open doors of fishermen's homes. Many are like galleries before others. Some wind through houses where living rooms of the same house will be found at either side of a public passage.

And then in what odd nooks the little shops will be found. There is not a single street 100 yards in length where a half dozen shops are continuously located. Even in these you must needs often ascend or descend a story or more. The most are literally hidden or perched in outlandish and out of the way spots, where, if not stumbled upon, one must repeatedly come with a guide or find rediscovery hopeless.

If you come at last through this labyrinth to the water side you will gaze back along the dormers, penthouses and roofs of the strange old city, and up and on to its terraced heights with increased enthusiasm for its rare quaintness and curious aspects. Tiny towers show here and there as if outjutting from natural rock. Bits of luxuriant foliage and masses of vines seem to spring from the roofs like rich clumps of emerald moss. Spires and wondrously high peaked roofs stand out against the gray and green background like spearheads of unpolished steel. Above all, the handsome terraces and the grand old heights, where once the beacon fires were lighted.

Gray and old as is this Cornish fisher town, but two bits of extreme antiquity remain. Just in the rear of the White Hart inn by the wharfside is a huge pile of greenish slate rock. Built upon this rock which forms its basement, is a tiny ancient structure known as Carn Glaze house. It was the stronghold of a smuggling, freebooting family in Queen Anne's time, and the myriad weird fisher and seafaring legends of St. Ives have nearly all had their origin in or bear some reference to this grew some old structure.

The parish church, built straight above the harbor edge, its east window sprayed with the foam of the wild northern tempests, which often lash the harbor furiously, was built in the sixteen years between 1410 and 1426, on the site of an olden structure, founded by St. Ivo, a Persian bishop, who came over from Ireland in the ninth century to preach the Gospel to the Cornish Britons.

Some stone carvings and a most beautiful and curious font of the old St. Ive chapel are still preserved. Perhaps the quaintest carvings in England are to be found in the present church. They were the work of the then village blacksmith, "a handye and devoute man," who carved the oak of the benches and choir stalls, not omitting to carve the forge, the bellows, hammer and nails and pincers of his own sturdy craft. He threw in a fair supply of Tudor roses, monks and angels, but, as SS. Andrew and Peter are appropriate patrons of the church where countless thousands of fisher folk have worshiped, the good smith also put them into every conceivable beneficent attitude, and as if to intensify their protection of the town of St. Ives and its people also wove fishes, saints and arabesques into most generous and profuse relationship.

If these wood carvings are curious studies, some of those in stone are equally outlandish. There are stone grotesques whose equals in strange and meaningless hideousness can hardly be found elsewhere in Europe. Seven represent mocking, leering faces of men and beasts. Two are distending their mouths with their fingers and protruding their tongues. One is a most horrible figure of an ape, and another wears a fool's cap of the period.

The stranger will be impressed with the extraordinary elevation of the soil of the tiny churchyard. When the place was first quite filled with the dead the burial place was covered over with several feet of sand and interment went on anew. Three times this was done, when it was finally found that to have repeated the process would have been to bury the church itself.

History, tradition and legend have carved some grim pictures upon the dim background of the past in this old Cornish fisher town. One historical fact will be sufficiently illustrative. In the Cornish uprising of 1649, its object being the restoration of the Catholic religion, to which Cornubians remained greatly attached long after the Reformation, John Payne, portrieve of St. Ives, was one of the inferior leaders. After the defeat of the Cornish, Sir Anthony Kingston, with a royal commission, was seeking out and punishing the rebels. He hung the mayor of Bodmin before his own door. St. Ives' portrieve received Sir Anthony humbly, and prepared a great dinner in his honor at the venerable George and Dragon, still standing in Market square.

During the dinner the portrieve heard the sound of hammering outside, and being disturbed was quieted by Sir Anthony with the remark that they were only about to hang a rebel. Dinner over, history relates, the commissioner invited the portrieve to inspect the gallows.

"What say you, master portrieve?" quoth Sir Anthony. "Is yon gibbet duly furnished for the hanging of a traitor?"

"All seems ready, an't please you," was the prompt rely.

"Then," said the commissioner, turning to a man-at-arms, "secure Master Payne and hang him straightway, for such is the protector's pleasure!"

Master Payne was hanged straightway, but the Cornish, who are Celts, like the Celtic Irish and Celtic Welsh, unpleasantly remember these little after dinner jests of English protectors and kings.

Great was the olden fame of St. Ives as a metropolis of fish and fishermen. It is still the most important of all Cornish fishing ports. Five thousand folk live here on what is harvested from the deep. For a thousand years or more, from father to son, from mother to daughter, the line has remained unbroken, has steadily increased, and so narrow is the life horizon of all these fishermen and families that not a score of them, it is said, ever see other English land than the hills and headlands of St. Ives' bay, save when at sea in their own boats.

These boats are all two masted, lug sailed, with round sterns, and range in tonnage from twenty to thirty tons. With complete outfits they cost from £300 to £650. Between 600 and 700 men and youths are employed the year round in fishing. During the winter they engage in line fishing for conger, whiting and ling, also securing a few cod. In March the spring mackerel fishing begins; and the St. Ives men are always found on their own grounds, from thirty to fifty miles north west of St. Ives in the Irish sea. Here they remain until the last of June, when they set out for the east coast Scottish herring fisheries, usually selecting grounds in the North sea, opposite the Firth of Forth, or abreast of Coldingham and Berwick.

During August they will be found along the east English coast in the neighborhood of Whitby, Scarborough and the Yarmouth of Dickens' "Peggotys," but are always back to St. Ives for the autumn St. Ives herring fishing, and a large number of their fleet are home in time for possible runs of "pilchers" (pilchards), the "Fair Maids of St. Ives," for which the ancient seaport has been famous for half a thousand years.

As nearly as can be described the pilchard is the sardine of the Mediterranean waters. It makes its appearance at St. Ives, when it comes at all, in tremendous shoals, during the months of September and October. From daylight until sunset of every day during these months watchmen called "huers" are stationed at lookouts on Carringgladen and Porthminster hills and Carn Crow's island. Their practiced eyes never fail of discerning the approach of a shoal of these fish. They come in such vast numbers that the surface of the bay changes its color and often is broken into ripples and foam from the movements of the dense masses of fish.

On sighting a school of pilchards the "huer" first blows a terrific blast upon his speaking trumpet. One blast is sufficient. All St. Ives folk tumble from their homes and rush wildly shouting "Heva! heva!" to the shore. Meantime the great seine boats, ready manned, have put out and are guided wholly in surrounding the shoal by the signaling of the "huer," which is done with a hoop on which white muslin is stretched, to which a long, light handle is attached. It is called "the bush," for in olden times a bush was used instead.

Shooting the seines is so rapidly done at St. Ives that often the entire shoal of pilchards will be literally impounded within ten minutes' time from the "huer's" trumpet signal. Single catches of pilchards have exceeded 6,000 hogsheads of salted and cured fish. Of late years the St. Ives pilchard fishery has been uncertain; but in 1889 there were 8,000 half casks of 214 pounds each taken. They are shipped to various Mediterranean ports for use in the Lenten season, Italy being the largest customer.

The St. Ives fisher folk are noted for their simplicity and piety. They are nearly all fervent Methodists, honest, superstitious, humble and good. They live in as great comfort as the fisher folk of Newhaven, in Scotland, and the man is more the master of his home and belongings. They are the most scrupulously clean and thrifty folk of this sort I have ever met. The women, though strong and brawny, have few of the Billingsgate characteristics of the fishwives of the English east coast, of Scotland, and of Galway and the Irish west coast. They mend the nets and "bulk," or pack, the pilchards. They are very domestic, and their prayer meetings and strict Sabbath keeping, though they are woefully ignorant, have done these St. Ives fisher folk no hurt or harm.

DR. KEELEY'S CURE.

English Doctors Condemn the Alleged Bi-Chloride of Gold Mixture

LONDON, July 26.—Dr. Leslie E. Keeley has met with but indifferent success in his efforts to popularize his bi-chloride of gold cure for alcoholism. At the quarterly meeting of the Society for the study of Inebriety recently held at the rooms of the British Medical Society, Dr. Norman Kerr, president of the former organization, spoke of Dr. Keeley's alleged "cure for inebriety," and commented on the fact that the treatment had not been approved by medical men in the United States, and had no standing there except as a money making institution, in which latter capacity it had been eminently successful. One of the most eminent English analysts had examined this "gold cure," and had found it to consist of 61.31 per cent. water, 6 per cent. sugar, 5.14 per cent. mineral salts, and 27.55 per cent. pure alcohol. The name under which it was advertised—"double chloride of gold"—the doctor said, was an imposition pure and simple, as the decoction contained neither gold nor chlorides of any kind. The president added that alcohol taken in the usual way was likely to do people far less harm than when imbibed as an ingredient of the "gold cure." Dr. J.E. Usher, of Melbourne, Australia, concurred in what Dr. Kerr had said, and added that his own conclusions after making a personal investigation of the Dwight institution and its methods were that the so-called cure was no cure at all, and was calculated to do more harm than good. A resolution was then proposed and unanimously adopted, expressing disapproval of the "gold cure", and of any other alleged cure for inebriety or anything else the composition of which is not disclosed.

A FAITHLESS CREW.

The Sailors of the Richard III. Desert—Labor Day Sports—Deaths, etc.

NANAIMO, July 26.—On Sunday night, when everything was wrapt in silence on the deck of the bark Richard III., the majority of the crew were engaged in the forecastle in plotting to desert the ship. The noise made by them in leaving the vessel awakened the captain, and the latter thinking something was wrong immediately repaired to the deck. He was just in time to witness the men going over the side of the vessel into a small boat and he attempted to stop them with their baggage, but they threatened that if he moved hand or foot he would be shot. The men then entered the boat and rowed away. The union seamen in Nanaimo are credited with causing the desertion, but Mr. P. Glynn, the union secretary here, denies all knowledge of the matter. The men who deserted do not belong to the union. The ship Eclipse now loading at Northfield wharf is being guarded night and day by two special constables.

The Court of Revision was held yesterday and opened early in the morning. There were 14 appeals in all and most of these were affirmed. It is astonishing how heavily property has been assessed this last year, and in the majority of cases it would be a difficult task to find a puchaser for the price lots have been assessed at.

Mr. R. Hindmarsh was fined $25 yesterday by Magistrate Planta for an infraction of the Sunday closing act. The information was laid by constable O'Connell, who claimed that Hindmarsh kept his house open after having notice to close.

Richard Sabiston, the infant son of Ald. and Mrs. Nightingale, died early yesterday morning from inflammation of the bowels.

Elizabeth, wife of Mark Churchill, died on Sunday in childbirth, aged 38 years. Deceased leaves a family of eight children.

Every preparation is being made by the committee selected to carry out the arrangements for the sports on Labor day. It has been decided to use the Caledonian picnic ground this year, and as there is a large and handsome platform it will be more convenient than the "green," which has formerly been used.

Dr. W. Bell Campbell has been elected resident physician at Northfield, in the place of Dr. Mc.Kechnie, who refused to sign the contract drawn up by the miners of the district.

Another race has been arranged between McLean and Dignan for $100 aside, to take place on Saturday. This time McLean is to row in a sliding seat, and for this purpose he will bring his own boat.

Mexican Justice.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 26.—Messrs. Chihn, Wymur and Sherlock, three Englishmen who are languishing in prison here on suspicion of having caused the death of their friend, host and countryman, Douglass Crosby, are fated it would seem to suffer all the inquities of the law's delay. The dead man stated in his ante-mortem before the local authorities, that he had shot himself accidentally. This statement was corroborated by his three friends, who were first to discover him after his fatal accident. Since their incarceration no evidence has been found to the contrary, but the judge who has charge of the investigation has refused to grant the prisoners their liberty which has been demanded by their counsel on a writ of habeas corpus. The judge ruled that the prisoners had failed to dispel the suspicions entertained against them, from which it would seem they were expected to prove themselves innocent instead of the prosecution proving their guilt. The result of the investigation conducted so far has not been made public and it is believed no discoveries have been made pointing to the guilt of the prisoners or the prosecution would have entered charges against them. The English colony manifest strong interest in the case. The prisoners are looked upon as the victims of an arbitrary and unprecedented abuse of judicial authority. No one will credit the abominable suspicion entertained against them by the court, and Sir Lionel Cardin, British Charge d'Affairs, will make a formal demand for their liberty from the Government in a few days.

Testing Coal.

Near Liverpool a perfectly equipped furnace has been erected for experimental purposes with different kinds of coal for use aboard ship. Forced draught is employed, and any person having coal can secure trials as to its efficiency for steamer purposes. Some American coal is being tested to show its merits in comparison with Welsh coal that is used aboard some of the ocean greyhounds on their west bound trips.—New York Times.

Montana, the Treasure State.

One of the English experts who examined the gem fields announced it to be his opinion that the diamond must sooner or later be found in Montana. All the conditions warrant its existence there. What a state Montana is! Gold, silver, copper, lead, asbestus, tin, iron, oil, gas, rubies, sapphires and a possibility of diamonds—all locked up in her ribs and pockets!—Julian Ralph in Harper's.

In 1782 it would appear that the women wore their hair to the play, to the discomfiture of those who wished to view the stage. Another style that was so incomprehensibly ugly was the combing of the hair straight up, back and front, over a cushion a foot high.—Washington Star.

The Preacher's Mare.

An English paper tells this story of the Rev. Dr. Pierson, who now occupies the pulpit of the late Mr. Spurgeon:

The Rev. H. W. Pierson, D.D., was for many years a travelling agent of the American Bible Society in the southwest. For a part of that time he rode a horse of which he was justly proud, and of which he speaks again and again, always in terms of eulogy, in his volume of reminiscences, "in the Bush." One night he arrived at a celebrated watering place. A four-horse stage coach drove up at the same time and Dr. Pierson noticed the eyes of the driver and the passengers fixed admiringly upon his Jenny. The colporteur entered the hotel, registered his name—without prefix—and went to the washroom. As he finished his ablutions and stood wiping his face, the stage driver burst into the room in great excitement. "Mr. Pierson," he said, "will you allow your horse to run? The money is up and we'll have a race if you'll only say the word." As he spoke he shook in the agent's face a mass of bank bills drawn through his fingers after after the manner of gamblers in those parts. Mr. Pierson was startled to hear his name pronounced in this way by a stranger, but bethought himself of the hotel register. Just then a servant appeared with his saddle bags, watting to show him to his room, and with an abrupt, emphatic "No, sir!" he turned away. In due time the supper bell rang, and Mr. Pierson stepped out of his room upon the piazza. There he encountered a gentleman who at once approached him pleasantly and said: "I hope, sir, you will reconsider your decision, and allow your mare to run. I have made a bet that she can out-run anything here, and the money is up. Allow me to say that I am an old Virginian, and a judge of horses, and if you let her run I am sure to win." By this time the Bible Society's agent had recovered his self-possession. He bowed politely to his Virginia friend: and said: "Do you think, sir, it will do for a Presbyterian clergyman to commence horse-racing so soon after reaching the Springs?" Now it was the other man's turn to be flustered. He did not say a word, and Dr. Pierson went into supper. When he came out again, the stranger made up to him in the most respectful manner. "Allow me to speak to you again, sir. I wish to apologise. I beg your pardon, sir. I assure you, sir, that nothing would induce me knowingly to insult a clergyman." Doctor Pierson made some good-natured reply, and thought nothing more about the matter. The next winter, in passing through another part of the country, he stopped at a blacksmith's shop to get a shoe tightened. "Wasn't you at the Springs last summer with this mare?" said the blacksmith. The doctor answered in the affirmative. "Well," said the blacksmith, patting the mare's neck and looking into vacancy with a pleased expression, as if he were living over again some pleasant scene, "they got her out, preacher, and run her, anyway." Then, as if to make the matter all right with the owner, he looked up into his face with a smile and an emphatic nod as he added, "And, preacher, she beat, she did. He won his money."

Peculiar Shellfish.

A peculiar kind of shellfish, the like of which has never been seen on the sound, has been fished out of 200 feet of water near Five Mile Point by rockcod fisherman.

The man felt a tug at his line, and began pulling in. Judging from the weight he concluded that he must have caught the grandfather of all the rockcod in the sound. When he had taken in all his line he was astonished to find that he had not only landed a splendid 5¼-pound cod, but also a rock full of perforations, to which which were attached six lively shellfish, each as big as one's fist, and somewhat resembling gigantic mussels. The shells of the fish were imbedded in the rock, and as soon as the rock was taken out of the water the fish craned their long necks out of the shells, just as a turtle would.

The necks of the fish were unlike anything the fishermen had ever seen; they resembled slightly the yellow mouth of the lamprey eel. Their mouths were pointed and surmounted by a hard, brown colored beak, which they opened and shut precisely as a robin does.

The fish and their abode were held together by means of the stout roots of a sea weed which had grown around them, and the whole weighed 8¼ pounds. The fisherman took the curiosity to the Denver market, and there it was placed on exhibition and attracted considerable attention. In the absence of a more scientific name, one of the men connected with the market named the shellfish "sea canaries."—Seattle Post Intelligencer.

Artificial Noses and Ears.

It is quite the fashion to attribute to aluminium adaptability for every conceivable purpose. In the majority of cases there is some warrant for doing so, as the new metal lends itself kindly to all kinds of conditions and uses, and among these is the manufacture of artificial noses and ears. Wonderfully good imitations of these members were formerly made in wax, celluloid, wood, porcelain or vulcanite. Vulcanite was the substance most in favor, from its lightness, strength and small liability to injury. After being vulcanized the piece was painted by an artist in oil colors as near the color of the skin of the intended wearer as possible.

For attaching it to the face springs were at first tried, but there was a strong prejudice against them on account of their supposed tendency to interfere with the circulation and cause irritation and possibly inflammation or absorption of the tissue. Finally it became customary to keep the nose in the required position by fixing it to eyeglasses, and in this way the wearer could almost defy detection. For this purpose aluminium is now in vogue. It is strong and light and is easily covered with muslin, which is afterward painted.

It has thus become a matter of even greater ease to adjust a portion of the nose or ear with perfect nicety and have it painted to so nearly resemble the skin that covers other portions of the face that the fact would remain unknown if you met the wearer a dozen times in a week.—New York Telegram.

Two Boys Kill a Bear.

Eugene Day, of New Portland, lives on the Millay hill, near the large forest extending back to the Kingfield mountains. Bears are quite often seen in that vicinity. About one week ago Mr. Day set two large traps back of his house in the woods, thinking that Bruin would be traveling this time of year. Thursday morning Mr. Day went away from home leaving Mrs. Day and his boy Willie and Mrs. Day's son, Tenny Pierce, about fifteen years old, at home.

Hearing the cry of a bear in the woods near the traps, the two boys loaded a gun with buckshot, putting a bullet on top of the shot, and went to the trap, finding a 300-pound bear caught just by one foot above the claw. He had apparently been in the trap but a short time and faced the boys. Nothing daunted, Tenny Pierce opened fire and by a lucky hit killed the bear the first shot. Had he not killed him the bear would have pulled his foot out and made short work of the boys.

The boys next proceeded home, and harnessing a 3-year-old colt to a drag went to the woods, and rolling the bear on to the drag hauled him home, one boy holding him on and the other driving the colt. The bear is a very large one, estimated to weigh from 300 to 400 pounds. The boys are quite proud of their exploit.—Eastern Argus.
